Eternal Friendship. At an international sports event two pole-vaulters tied for second place and the silver medal when it became too dark to complete the competition. They were good friends, and on the podium they were disappointed when one was asked to accept the silver medal and the other the bronze even though they had tied. When they returned to Japan they cut the two medals in half and joined half of the silver to half of the bronze. Each then had what they agreed to call a 'medal of eternal friendship.' Sport is about winning and losing but it is also about friendship. (Association of Catholic Priests).

"The interruptions ARE my work!" Once, a man went to see a friend who was a professor at a great university. However, as they sat chatting in the professor's office, they were continually interrupted by students who came knocking at the door, seeking the professor's advice about something or the other. Each time the professor rose from his chair, went to the door, and dealt with the student's request. Eventually the visitor asked the professor, "How do you manage to get your work done with so many interruptions?" He replied, "At first I used to resent the interruptions to my work. But one day it suddenly dawned on me that the interruptions were my work." – The professor had recognized that his "work" included being available to his students first, followed by the rest: scholarship, teaching, grading papers, and committee work for the Department and University. And it was by no coincidence that he was the happiest and most fulfilled professor on the campus. He was a true shepherd caring for the sheep entrusted to his care. (Flor McCarthy in New Sunday & Holy Day Liturgies; quoted by Fr. Botelho).
